Our faculty aren't just instructors.

One of Lander's greatest strengths is its engaged and passionate faculty – scholars, researchers and experts who weave years of practice and knowledge into their teaching styles. They're among the best in their fields, and they are focused on helping you realize and reach your potential.

Lander's small class sizes allow for one-on-one educational interactions between professors and students, providing individualized attention not often found at larger universities.

Students are encouraged to work with faculty members outside of class to develop, implement and exhibit empirical research. Many students take advantage of this opportunity to present the results of their work at regional and national professional conferences. This hands-on experience is excellent preparation for graduate school and gives Lander students abilities that employers value, such as critical thinking, communication skills and an appreciation for data-driven results.

Go beyond the classroom.

Study Abroad

Lander is committed to developing leaders for a global environment. By traveling, living and studying in countries around the world, students are able to learn about other cultures firsthand while earning credit for a degree and gaining useful international experience.

Most Lander students study abroad at universities in Europe, such as the University of Winchester in England, but students have also recently studied in Asia and South America. Along with the traditional semester-, summer- and year-abroad options, Lander also offers shorter faculty-led tours, focusing on topics ranging from arts and music, to history and economics.

Honors College

Lander's Honors College is designed for students with strong academic records (SAT: 1170 or higher; ACT: 24 or higher) and is a supplement to the traditional college curriculum. The program fits with any major and provides opportunities and challenges tailored to students' individual interests.

Through small-group seminars and classes that emphasize discussion, as well as field trips, presentations, hands-on projects and individual research, Honors College students build valuable relationships with faculty members and their fellow Honors scholars. In addition to completing at least 15 hours of Honors-level course work, students complete a "breakaway" experience, such as study abroad, an internship or an independent research project.

Military Science and Leadership/ROTC

The Reserve Officers' Training Corps (ROTC) program at Lander University enhances a student's college education by providing unique training and practical experience in leadership and management. Upon graduation, contracted cadets who have successfully completed ROTC training are awarded a commission as a second lieutenant in the U.S. Army, U.S. Army National Guard or the U.S. Army Reserve.

To prepare students to become commissioned officers, the ROTC program combines college courses in military science and leadership with summer training. The military science curriculum consists of a two-year basic course open to all students without military obligation; and a two-year advanced course, which requires a commitment to military service and focuses on leadership development and tactics.

A Stellar Value

With so much to offer, you might expect a Lander education to come with a steep price. But, Lander is actually one of the most affordable higher education options in South Carolina. Along with financial aid packages that work for every budget, Lander's tuition has been frozen for six consecutive years, making it possible for students to earn their degrees without earning loads of student debt. It's no wonder the university has been named one of the "Best Bang for the Buck" colleges in the Southeast (Washington Monthly, 2020).
