

Lander University, Greenwood, South Carolina

Lecturer of English

The Position: The Department of English and Foreign Languages at Lander University invites candidates to apply for a Lecturer of English position to begin August 2023. The department seeks candidates skilled at teaching first-year composition. Opportunities to teach courses other than composition may be available, depending upon departmental need and the candidate's qualifications. While not tenure-track, the position does include the opportunity for promotion.

The Department: The Department of English and Foreign Languages offers degrees in English; English, Professional Writing; English, Secondary Teacher Certification; Spanish; and Humanities. We expect to offer an emphasis in Creative Writing beginning next year. Our two-course composition sequence and introduction to literature and survey courses serve the general education curriculum.

Requirements: Applicants must have earned an M.A. or M.F.A. degree in English, Creative Writing, or a related discipline by the time of appointment. The ideal candidate will be a skilled teacher of undergraduates who is also eager to engage in departmental and institutional service and able to work collaboratively in a close-knit department.

Application: Candidates should submit a cover letter explaining their qualifications and interest in the position, a current CV that includes contact information for at least three references, and evidence of effective teaching. Electronic submissions are highly preferred and should be addressed to Melody Johnson, Administrative Specialist for the Department of English and Foreign Languages, at mjohnson@lander.edu. Please place Lecturer of English Search in the subject line. Please address questions to this same point of contact. Review of applications will begin January 2, 2023, and continue until the position is filled.
