

Lecturer or Clinical Assistant Professor of Psychology or Human Services Lander University

Lander University invites applicants for a Lecturer or Clinical Assistant Professor of Psychology or Human Services (faculty rank and disciplinary orientation depend upon credentials) to begin in August 2021. A master's degree in psychology, human services, or appropriate sub-field of these disciplines is required, although candidates with a doctoral degree in clinical/ counseling psychology or human services are preferred. Preference is also given to candidates with a license or who are pursuing licensure in their field of specialization. Applicants should have credentials to teach a variety of courses within the the Human Services and/or Psychology majors.

University-level teaching experience is required, with a preference for persons who have taught face to face, hybrid, and online courses. Lander University's Center for Online and Innovative Learning supports on-going training for faculty. The teaching load for this position is either 27 or 30 hours a year, depending upon the level of service in advising or program development provided to the Department. This position would involve teaching at the main campus as well as online. Summer teaching assignments are available.

The Department of Psychological Science and Human Services is a part of the College of Behavioral and Social Sciences and offers B.S. degrees in both Human Services and Psychology as well as minors in child and family studies, human services, and psychology.

Located in the upstate region of South Carolina, Lander is a public comprehensive university committed to teaching in a liberal arts environment.
