I Policy Statement and Purpose

A faculty member's having a teaching overload can compromise the quality of his or her teaching and compete with his or her other faculty responsibilities. Faculty overloads must be avoided except in unanticipated extenuating circumstances and as a last resort.

II Guidelines

- A. An overload is defined as the addition of a course that would result in more contact hours than are required in the faculty member's 9-month contract period. On occasion, a faculty member with a 12-hour load in each term might teach 15 hours in one term and 9 in the other term; this situation would not constitute an overload.
- B. Extenuating circumstances may include such situations as an untimely resignation, illness, or death of a faculty member; an error of the part of the University resulting in an exigent student situation that affects the ability to graduate on time; and the initiation of a new major or minor that necessitates offering courses not yet fully staffed.
- C. Before assigning an overload, department chairs and deans must exhaust other options, such as:
 - 1. Recruiting an adjunct faculty member
 - 2. Reassigning courses, or
 - 3. Cancelling low enrollment or less essential courses.
- D. An overload shall be assigned only to a faculty member who has agreed to teach additional hours.
- E. An individual faculty member may not assign him- or herself an overload.
- F. No faculty member may be assigned more than a one-course overload in a single semester.
- G. No faculty member may be assigned an overload in more than two consecutive regular semesters, fall-spring or spring-fall.
- H. A faculty member receiving course releases for other duties shall not be eligible for an overload assignment.
